Letters TO THE EDITORS

Dear Nick Mag, I love your magazine, but in the last two issues, I didn't get an "Ask the Boss Lady." I liked that column. Please don't forget next time!

Katie D, age 8 Riverview, Michigan

Dear Katie, "Ask the Boss Lady" has moved to the Ooze News section. If you check your last two issues, you should the Bureau of Missing Boss Ladies.

Dear Nick Mag, I hear you work on Broadway. Do you work on the Broadway where all the Broadway shows are done?

A Whale Ate My Homework

What's it like to go to school in the Arctic Circle?
Or in a castle? NICKELODEON
MAGAZINE's Carmen Morais found out when she talked to students and teachers in some very unusual classrooms around the world.

Pencil Overboard!

ALASKA's J.R. Gildersleeve School is located on the J.R. Gildersleeve Camp (left), a floating logging camp that's home to 10 lumberjack families. The camp is pulled by a tugboat along the Alaskan coast. It anchors in coves while the lumberjacks go ashore and cut trees. When they're finished, the camp travels to a new area. Fifteen kids attend the school, including Beth Y., a sixth-grader, and Chris E., a seventh-grader.

Nickelodeon Magazine: Do you get seasick in school? Chris E.: Only when it's really rough, with three- or four-foot waves, or when there are 60-mile-per-hour winds.

NM: Do you have to wear life vests in class?

Beth Y.: No, but when we're walking around on the camp, we have to wear one. When we pass the swim test (usually in the eighth grade), we can stop wearing them.

NM: Do people ever fall in the water?

BY: Lots of people have.

NM: What can you see out your window?

CE: Whales. We get humpback and killer whales. The humpbacks are huge. They're bigger than the school.

NM: What is the floating camp like?

CE: The houses look like normal houses on land. They sit on round logs that are tied together with cables. The whole community is 600 feet long.

NM: Does it get cold up there?

BY: It snows a lot. We get a few feet of snow in just one storm sometimes. We don't get those days off—we still go to school.

NM: On a scale of 1 to 10, with 10 being the best, what do you think of this homework excuse: "A whale ate it." CE: A 10. You could feed your homework to the whales if you wanted to.

NM: How about: "The table was rocking too much." BY: A 9. That happens often.

Do They Have to Log On? These kids in Alaska float through school.

Do They Have Knight School?

If you visit the 700-year-old castle in Neubeuern, GERMANY (below), you wouldn't meet a king or queen. But you would meet the 200 kids who attend Schloss Neubeuern School, a boarding school for grades 5 through 13 (schools in Germany have an extra grade). Dr. Reiner Schmähling was the headmaster for 11 years.

Nickelodeon Magazine: If kids are bad, do you send them to the dungeon?

Dr. Reiner Schmähling: No. If students get in trouble, they have to do community work. Or, if they've done something really bad, they might get expelled.

NM: Is jousting one of the school sports?
RS: Unfortunately, no. We don't have horses.

NM: What sports do you have?

RS: We're just a half-hour away from a ski area, so we ski almost every weekend.

NM: Is your castle haunted?

RS: We have our own ghost called the Blue Woman. We don't know who she is. Both students and teachers claim to have heard or felt her presence. Some say she is the wife of a former owner of the castle.

NM: On a scale of 1 to 10, what do you think of this homework excuse: "The Blue Woman told me not to do it."

RS: A good one. An 8 or a 9, because it's funny.

In Search of the Holy Grade: Their classroom is their castle.

Go to the Head of the Continent!

North America's northernmost community is in CANADA, a thousand miles from the North Pole. It's the Inuit village of Grise Fiord (population 135) and it's very small-you can walk from one end of town to the other in just six minutes. The town's one school, Umimmak School, has 59 students from kindergarten to 10th grade. Two of them are 10th-graders Adeline M. and Susie K. The principal is Harry Kielly.

Nickelodeon Magazine: Where is it warmer: inside your refrigerator, or outside your classroom?

Adeline M.: Inside the refrigerator.

NM: How cold does it get up there?

Harry Kielly: In January and February, it goes down to -40°F. Exposed flesh freezes in 30 seconds, so you have to be careful.

NM: What's it look like in the winter?

AM: We don't see the sun from the middle of November until late January.

Susie K.: And in the summer, the sun doesn't set from the middle of April until July.

NM: Do you have a lot of snow days at school?

HK: Once or twice a year, we lose a day of school due to snow, if it blows hard. You get a "whiteout" then.

NM: On a scale of 1 to 10, what do you think of the following homework excuse: "My sled dog ate it." SK: I wouldn't believe it.

Too Cool For School? Not in the Arctic Circle.

Sailing Through Class

Carolyn N. and her sister Melanie have never lived on dry land. They've lived their whole lives on their parents' sailboat, going back and forth between VIRGINIA and THE BAHAMAS. The boat is more than their house—it's also their school. Carolyn is in the 9th grade and Melanie (left) is in the 11th grade.

Nickelodeon Magazine: What do you get instead of snow days?

Carolyn N.: If it's rough weather and the boat rocks too much, then sometimes it's hard to have school.

NM: What do you do during rough seas?
CN: I stay downstairs and pick up things that fall.

NM: What kind of boat is it?

CN: A 47-foot sailboat. It has two bedrooms, two bathrooms, a kitchen, and a main cabin where we eat and do schoolwork. It's named Chez Nous, which means "Our House" in French.

NM: Do you ever get seasick?

CN: Yes. I'm kind of outgrowing it.

Melanie N.: No. Everyone else gets seasick but me.

NM: Do you ever want to yell, "All hands on deck!" during a test?

CN: I never thought about that one. I've had to leave a test behind to put up sails.

NM: Do both your parents teach?

CN: My dad teaches history and science. My mom teaches French and math.

NM: Who grades your tests?

CN: We mail them to a school. It takes about 10 days to get them back. Sometimes the teachers will make comments. They also write me letters telling me how I can do better.

NM: Which subjects do you wish you could toss overboard?

MN: Geometry.

CN: Math.

NM: What's the best excuse a sailboat kid can give for not doing his or her homework?

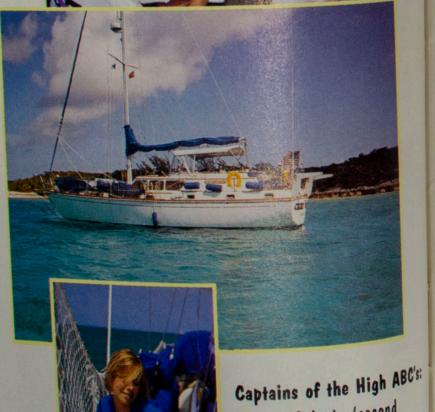

CN: That you got seasick.

MN: A shark ate it.

NM: On a scale of 1 to 10, what do you think of this excuse: "I forgot my homework in the Bahamas."

MN: That's a pretty good one. A 10.

Tune in or Tune Out

AUSTRALIA's Outback is a grassy, dry region that covers more than half of the country (above). It is home to aboriginal and ranching families. But because the families that live there are so spread out, it's impossible for many of the kids to travel to a school. Instead, there is the Alice Springs School of the Air. Each of the school's 110 students tunes in to school on a short-wave radio to get lessons. We spoke to Derek Thomas, the assistant principal, and Elizabeth Richter-Cross, a teacher.

Nickelodeon Magazine: How can you tell if kids are paying attention if you can't see them?

Elizabeth Richter-Cross: You get the kids to talk as a group.

Derek Thomas: They mail their work to us every 10 days. Some families have a plane deliver their mail only once a week. Some families have to drive to get their mail. We grade it and send it back within one week. So it takes about three weeks, from beginning to end. Also, every so often, we have overnight patrols and three-day patrols where the teacher drives out to visit the students. Sometimes we fly there.

NM: How often do the students tune in?

DT: As a class, they tune in three mornings each week. Then there's a private lesson time for 10 minutes in the afternoon, when each student goes one-on-one with a teacher.

NM: What's it like to be on short-wave radio?

DT: When it works, it's great. But when it doesn't, it's frustrating. Sometimes, when the reception is bad, you can only hear one kid.

NM: What's the best excuse your students have given for not doing their homework?

IL MADE IN USA 2 INO. R SOLITE 3 | S. A. S. WILLIAM IL

DT: "I sent it three weeks ago." And we never really know if they're telling the truth or not, with the system here.

NM: Do kids ever turn you off?

ERC: That rarely happens. We just call them right up on the phone, and say, "Turn the radio back on."

NM: On a scale of 1 to 10, what do you think of this excuse: "A thorny devil* ate it."

ERC: A 10. I like that one for its originality.

DT: I'll only give it a 9, to change it for something better—how about "A mouse plague ate it"? We get a lot of those around here.

* A lizard native to Australia

Testing 1,2,3: School of the Air students complete their lessons.

"Otto" is more than a name-it's also a palindrome. A palindrome is a word or sentence that is spelled the same way backwards and forwards. Hidden below is one phrase that isn't a palindrome. To find it, write each phrase backwards on the spaces below. Answer on page 63.

FOR

The Head of Ed.

As the Secretary of Education for the United States,

Richard W. Riley (above) has a lot of people looking up to him—not only teachers and principals, but also millions of students. He's President Clinton's chief adviser on education, which means he keeps the president informed about schools, from kindergarten to college. Robin Sayers asked Riley about his school days.

Nickelodeon Magazine: What was your favorite school lunch?

Richard Riley: Hot dogs. Maybe someone can change hot dogs around to make them healthy.

RR: Yes, I do. Actually, I usually write down ideas, rather than doodle. But I'm good at stars.

And I draw people—smiling people, usually. Sometimes I draw muscle-bound people. And I can really draw a good airplane, wings and all. When I was little, I used to draw airplanes all the time. I also draw boxes and then make them into three dimensions. I enjoy that.

NM: Were you ever in a school play?

RR: Yes. It was the end of the first grade. It was a play on traffic safety, and I was a red light. My mother made me a little black suit with a little red dot in the middle.

I was very nervous. My line was this: "I'm a red light/As you can see/And you better stop/When you see me."

I was so nervous, I walked off the stage and threw up.

It's true. I was terribly embarrassed. That was my introduction to public life. It's been better since then.

NM: Were you ever in student government?

RR: Yes. Well, I ran for everything, but I didn't always win. The first time I ran for office was for president of the student body in middle school—which we called junior high school. I lost that election. But since I've been in public life, I haven't lost an election.

NM: Any advice for kids who fall asleep at their desks?
RR: Don't watch Nickelodeon too late, and get a good night's rest.

Oh, You Savage!

Ben Savage plays Cory Matthews, a highschool student searching for life's answers, on the television show Boy Meets World. NICKELODEON MAGAZINE met the 14-yearold star to ask him what he's found out.

Nickelodeon Magazine: How are you like Cory?

Ben Savage: We're interested in the same things. Also, NM: Would you ever wear one again? I'm wild and energetic, and so is Cory. That's why I like BS: Only if someone paid me.

NM: How are you different?

BS: I like to have fun in school, as Cory does, but I'm also studious, and I try to get good grades. I don't think that's a really big part of Cory's life.

NM: What do you think Cory will end up doing when he gets older?

BS: Three years ago he wanted to be a baseball player. But I think he's matured beyond that. Maybe he'll be a comedian, and get his own comedy show.

NM: What was your most embarrassing moment on

BS: For one episode, I had to walk around in a tight little wrestler outfit, and everybody on the set laughed at me.

NM: Is there anything special you do before a performance?

BS: The whole cast gathers backstage in a circle right before the show. We put our hands in the middle and scream as loudly as we can for five seconds. We do that before every show, and it always brings good luck.

NM: Do you have any good luck charms?

BS: My mom is my good luck charm. When I'm filming the show, I need her to be there. When she's not at the show, I always think I do badly.

NM: Are you tutored on the set?

BS: I am, but I also go back to real school in Illinois when we aren't taping the show.

NM: What are the drawbacks of being tutored on the set? BS: You only spend three hours a day on school. A lot of people might think that's great, but when you go back to regular school, you're behind in your work.

NM: What was your first acting role?

BS: I did a commercial for a drug store when I was five years old. I just had to sit by a pool and smile and wave. It was such a big deal for me, and made me very happy.

NM: Do you want to keep on acting?

BS: Yup! I want to be an actor, a writer, a producer, a director, and an author. I want to write novels, movie scripts, and TV shows.

NM: How is your bedroom at home decorated?

BS: It's a very simple room—just black and white. When I'm older and have my own room, I'm going to have a huge bedroom. My fantasy bedroom would have two beds-one waterbed and one regular. I'd have a TV (I don't have one now), and a lot of lights. There'd be a Jacuzzi. And I want a bark-o-lounger.

NM: How many brothers and sisters do you have? BS: I have a sister and a brother. [Ben's brother is Fred Savage, who starred in The Wonder Years.]

NM: Do you get along better with your real brother, Fred, or your TV brother, Eric?

BS: Probably my real brother, Fred. Anyway, if I don't choose him, he'll kill me.

NM: Which brother gives you better presents?

BS: Fred, because he buys stuff. Eric isn't the kind of guy who buys presents. He'd be more likely to spend the money on a girl.... By the way, I'd just like to share something interesting with your readers: The tomato is a fruit, not a vegetable. I just thought your readers should know.

MEET HIS WORLD: (clockwise from top left) The cast of Boy Meets World; Cory and best pal Shawn (Rider Strong); Cory sitting pretty with friend Topanga (Danielle Fishel); Cory and Shawn get an earful from Cory's brother, Eric (Will Friedle).

We caught up with some Hollywood stars at Nickelodeon's 8th Annual Kids' Choice Awards and surprised them with a pop quiz about school.

Raven-Symone Nicole Lee on Hangin' with Mr. Cooper)

Which do you like better: being tutored on the lot, or regular school? I like my regular school in Atlanta better, because I have all my friends there. I think being tutored is easier, because I don't have to raise my hand.

What do you like to do at recess? Sometimes I go and stand by the teacher so I can be first in line!

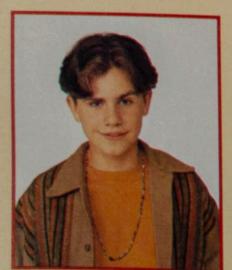

Rider Strong (Shawn on Boy Meets World)

What is the worst thing about school on

It's harder. You never get a break-you're either doing school, or you're acting.

What is the best thing about school on

The individual attention. Usually it's only one teacher and two students, so you learn a lot faster, and a lot more.

Tionne "T-Boz" Watkins (TLC)

What was your favorite subject when you were in school?

What was your favorite thing to do during recess? I always played kickball.

What was your favorite hot lunch when you were in school? Pizza, vegetable sticks, and a sugar cookie. I used to ask everyone for

Tia and Tamera Mowry (Tia Landry and Tamera Campbell on Sister, Sister)

What are your favorite subjects? Tia: English, because we love to read. Our favorite books are To Kill A Mockingbird and The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn.

Do you prefer packed or hot lunches? Tia: Packed, because we despise cafeteria lunches. One week I'll pack them, and the next week Tamera will pack them.

Tamera: We usually have the same lunch, though: a ham and cheese sandwich, a Moon Pie, a fruit drink, and a piece of fruit.

Do you have nicknames at school? Tamera: People used to call us "The Buck Twins" or "Buckwheat," because before we had braces, we had buck teeth.

Natalia Cigliuti (Lindsay Warner on Saved By the Bell: The New Class)

Have you ever been caught passing notes?

Yes, many times. They got read in front of the class, which is embarrassing, especially when the boy you're writing about is in the class!

What was your favorite field trip? We went to the La Brea Tar Pits [in Los Angeles. California] with my tutor. I was just amazed.

What was the worst lunch your school served? Once I dropped my hamburger, and it literally bounced on the floor.

You'd never forget a visit to Lucy, the Margate Elephant. She's made of wood and metal, is as tall as a six-story building, and weighs 90 tons. Lucy was built by James V. Lafferty in 1881. Lafferty wanted to sell some property on the New Jersey shore, so he built the giant pachyderm in the city of Margate to attract people to his land.

Once she was completed, Lafferty would auction off his property while standing 65 feet high in her "howdah" (the carriage on an elephant's back).

Lafferty sold the eye-catching elephant to the Gertzen family in 1887. They named her Lucy, and turned her into a tourist attraction, charging people 10 cents for a tour.

In 1902, a family leased Lucy as a summer home. They converted the inside into four bedrooms, a dining room, a kitchen, and a parlor. Since then, Lucy has also been used as a restaurant, a dance hall, an ice-cream parlor, a children's library, and a bathhouse.

1903, Lucy sank to her knees in the sand and had to be dug out. She survived a hurricane in 1944 that devastated the coast of New Jersey.

In 1970, the Gertzens donated Lucy to the city of Margate. A high-rise was planned on Lucy's spot, so the Save Lucy Committee was formed to rescue her. On July 20, 1970, a pickup truck pulled Lucy two blocks to her present site. Thousands of people gathered to watch.

In 1976, Lucy was proclaimed a National Historic

HOW LUCY MEASURES UP: Legs: 22 feet high and 10 feet in diameter. Eyes: 18 inches in diameter. Ears: 17 feet long by 10 feet wide; each ear weighs about 2000 pounds.

Pieces of wood used to build her: almost a million.

Amount of tin used: 12,000 square feet (exactly one-fourth the size of a football field).

Monkeycups

also known as: Nepenthes (neh-PEN-theez) or Tropical Pitcher Plant.

What they are: Monkeycups are meat-eating vines that catch and digest insects. They usually eat ants, cockroaches, and wasps, but some monkeycups have been found containing centipedes, scorpions, small mammals, and reptiles.

How they do it: Monkeycups grow bulb-shaped containers called "pitchers" on the end of their leaves. Nectar under the lid of the pitcher attracts hungry insects. While looking for food, the bugs sometimes slip on the waxy inner walls. They fall down into the pitcher and drown in water at the bottom.

How big are monkeycups? The entire plant can be from 1.5 feet to 65 feet tall. Some pitchers are so tiny that a pea would block the opening. Others are so large that they can hold more than a pint of water.

Where do they grow? The humid tropics of Asia and the South Pacific. Other types of meat-eating pitcher plants grow in the United States.

Neat Party Trick: They will digest the shell and the white of a hard-boiled egg if it is fed to them.

GUTS has gone international with Global GUTS—an Olympics-style competition just for kids. Ninety-six kids from 12 different countries will come together at Nickelodeon Studios in Orlando, Florida, to compete in track, field, water, and aerial events. You can follow the athletes' progress over the course of the competition, from the first to the final events. Global GUTS airs Monday through Friday at 4:30 PM (Eastern Standard Time) from September 4 to October 4.

Compete at home with this Global GUTS maze. You can play alone or with friends. To play alone: Choose one maze, and start at the red arrow, See how quickly you can get to the Mega-Crag in the center. To play with friends: Each person picks a different maze. Start at the same time, and the first person to reach the Mega-Crag wins. Good luck!

The countries competing in Global GUTS are:

Israel Ukraine Russia Kazakhstan Georgia Belarus
W.K. U.S. Germany Portugal Spain Mexico

- 1/2 cup of Stimpy (the loyal part, not the hairball part)
- 1 cup of Natalie Daise from Gullah Gullah Island (because she really loves kids)
- a pinch of Doug (because he's earnest, and tries to do what's right-also, he can't dance)

Having trouble in school? Some very successful people were once told that they wouldn't make it to the head of the class, either.

thought this was a waste of time, and said that Charles would disgrace the family. But looking at nature helped Darwin develop his famous theory of evolution, proving that sometimes you just have to answer the call of the wild.

Charles Darwin

Thomas Edison

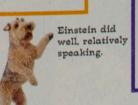

The inventor of the first practical light bulb wasn't always considered very bright. Edison left school when he was eight years old, after being there for only a few months. Severe ear infections had left him partially deaf, and the teachers mistook his hearing problem for a learning disability. His mother continued his studies at home, and Edison taught himself about chemistry and electricity. Later, Edison got his revenge on school by inventing the phonograph and the first commercially successful movie camera-two gadgets that have kept students from doing their homework for years.

Albert Einstein

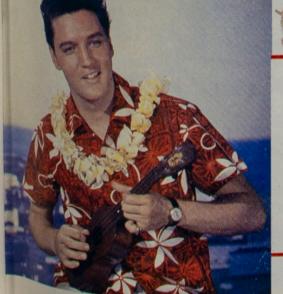

Until he was nine years old, Einstein spoke so slowly that people thought he had a learning disability. His school headmaster told Albert's parents that Einstein would never be successful. But Einstein turned out to be the only member of his high school class to go on to win the Nobel Prize in physics.

The King of Rock 'n' Roll did not exactly rule his high school. Not only did he fail music class, but he was also rejected from the Glee Club because his teacher didn't like his voice. Others felt the same way: At 18, he was turned down for a church gospel quartet. And the next year, when he played Nashville's Grand Ole Opry, a booking agent told him that he should go back to driving a truck.

Spacey Song Contest Results

In the April/May issue, we asked you to write lyrics for a song honoring a planet or something else in outer space. Here are the contest winners and honorable mentions. The three winners each received Nickelodeon Videos and other great Nickelodeon stuff.

The Planet Song

(sung to the tune of "Twinkle Twinkle, Little Star")

Mercury, Mercury, you're closest to the sun, You could toast a burger bun. Venus, Venus, you're so hot, You're just like a burning pot.

Earth, Earth, the planet with life, It will make you shout, "All right!" Mars, Mars, you're really red, You must be a big hot head.

Jupiter, Jupiter, you're so big, Are you made of a fig? Saturn, Saturn, I love your rings, I wonder if they're made of beans.

Uranus, Uranus, you spin on your side,
I guess you have a crazy mind.
I know this song is really weird,
But think if Neptune grew a beard.

Pluto, Pluto, I think you're swell, But do the planets call you Mel?

Chad M., age 11 Knob Lick, Kentucky

How Much is That Martian in the Window (sung to the tune of "How Much is That Doggie in
